NOTED MEN BREAK EARTH FOR LIBRARY

Interesting Exercises Held at Howard University.

FIRST EARTH TURNED UP

Justice Barnard Lifts First Spade-ful, and Others Follow During Ceremony in Preparation for Building of $50,000 Carnegie Institution.
Prominent Men Speak.

With addresses of sympathy and with encouragement for the uplift of the negro race, ground was formally broken at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon for the new $50,000 library donated to Howard University by Andrew Carnegie.

Bareheaded, in the presence of the assembled students, Justice Barnard, of the District Supreme Court, and Secretary Ballinger, of the Interior Department, dug the first spadeful of earth. Commissioner Macfarland, President Thirkield, Judge De Lacy, of the Juvenile Court; Justice Anderson, Judge Henry M. Baker, and others well known locally and nationally also turned earth for the new building.

Students Sing Hymn Marching.

When President Thirkield and the guests of honor were seated on a stand on the northern part of the campus, forty students, of both sexes, marched from the administration building singing. When the hymn was concluded President Thirkield introduced Rev. J. Carruthers, who delivered the benediction.

President Thirkield then spoke of the work done by the trustees in getting the library, complimenting highly Theodore Roosevelt, who, as President of the United States, took an active interest in the institution and was instrumental in inducing Mr. Carnegie to endow the library.

"I consider a library as the heart of such an institution," said Dr. Thirkield, "and with this added impetus to our work we should make better records than ever before. We now have a home for the 6,000 volumes which have been collected."

Pays Tribute to Carnegie.

Commissioner Macfarland was the next speaker and told of the excellent work done by Mr. Carnegie in the cause of education and advancement. He said in part:

"Andrew Carnegie has already done much for the National Capital, and is willing to do more. His first gift, the beautiful building of the Public Library of the District of Columbia, will be supplemented by the branch library buildings whenever Congress accepts them. Besides this, the noble home of the International Bureau of American Republics, now fast rising at the entrance of Potomac Park, and the headquarters of the Carnegie Institution, now building in Sixteenth street, are substantial contributions to the enrichment of the city.

"To-day we are breaking ground for another building, the gift of his generosity, which will be of lasting benefit to this university and through it to the whole country. All intelligent men now agree that this university and like institutions should have the cordial support of all. We all believe in industrial and other forms of education, but we cannot do without university training for teachers and professional men and women. In this building, when it is completed, the eager students of all the future will find the life blood of master minds for their instruction and inspiration."

Justice Barnard's Optimism.

A bit of the philosophy that has won him eminence on the judicial bench was injected by Justice Barnard, the next speaker.

"There are no accidents," said the jurist. "What may appear to us as such are but the means by which an all-wise and all-loving Creator guides and protects and governs his creatures. Disasters and disappointments are often blessings in disguise."

"Providence provides opportunities," continued Justice Barnard, "for all men to choose what is right and true as of themselves, and so to refuse what is evil and false, to the end that true character may be built up and established while we are in this world. To that end we are kept in freedom, so that we can exercise reason in the choice of our way of life."

"When we stop to consider what has brought about any given result we find that many different causes have apparently combined to produce it. We cannot give the credit wholly to any one, and yet if any one of these causes had not contributed, the result would not have been accomplished."

Justice Barnard then told of how Mr. Carnegie happened to become interested in the library, and related the assistance rendered by Mr. Roosevelt, adding that the wielder of the "big stick" would be present at the laying of the corner stone, held at the same time as the commencement exercises.

Secretary Ballinger Speaks.

Secretary Ballinger spoke of his sympathy with the movement to educate and uplift the negro, and related incidents of his life in the South. He said he had never ceased to regret that the negro had not had the same chance of advancement as the white man.

Following the school yell and singing of "America," Secretary Ballinger lifted the first earth for the foundations. Justice Barnard followed him, and others took a turn with the spade.

The new library will rival in architectural beauty the Public Library, at Ninth street and New York avenue.
